PERRY — Nominees for the Cherry Blossom Festival's Veterans Day Parade received recognition from Perry City Council. Council also approved the appointment of Robert Smith as the new City Manager and the installation of security cameras downtown during Tuesday night's meeting.

The city chose Carey Washington for the chance to ride alongside Mayor Randall Walker at Macon's Cherry Blossom Festival Veterans Day Parade. Washington is a graduate of Perry High School, class of 1997.

Upon graduation, he started serving in the United States Marines, where he was involved in multiple missions, including time in Afghanistan.

Local non-profits working together to give away spaghetti this Thanksgiving

WARNER ROBINS — This Thanksgiving season, Aaliyah Cares and Daniella's House of Hope are hosting a spaghetti food drive on Tuesday, Nov. 25, from noon to 3 p.m., located at Faith Lutheran Church on 301 N. Pleasant Hill Rd.

Coca Kleckley, CEO of Aaliyah Cares, said she has always wanted to do community outreach.

"With the recent events of SNAP being up in the air and federal employees losing their income, everything happened so abruptly. I kind of just jumped into action and just wanted to feed my community," she said. "People are working so hard these days, and I feel like they don't have the time to cook a warm meal. I wanted to give away something that is ready to enjoy."

Daniella Edmund, CEO of Daniella's House of Hope, said they wanted to do something different this Thanksgiving. With both Kleckley and Edmund loving spaghetti, the idea just clicked.

"A nice baked, warm spaghetti will last a family pretty long if you come and get it," Edmund said.

This is the first event in collaboration with Aaliyah Cares and Daniella's House of Hope, and this is the first food drive hosted by Aaliyah Cares. Edmund's non-profit is no stranger to community outreach, as they do annual events.

Man sentenced to prison for insurance payment scheme

By BRIEANNA SMITH

PERRY — A former owner and repeat winner of "Insurance Agent of the Year" of a Warner Robins insurance company was sentenced to federal prison for an insurance payment scheme he conducted to win the award and its benefits, according to a press release by the Department of Justice.

Jeremy Lasseter, 44, of Perry, was sentenced by U.S. District Judge Marc Treadwell on Nov. 19 to 27 months in prison and over 221,000 paid in restitution to the victim. Lasseter pleaded guilty to one count of bank fraud on Aug. 27.

According to court documents and statements, Lasseter owned the Alfa Insurance Agency group in Warner Robins. He had been selected as Alfa Georgia's "Insurance Agent of the Year" for four years in a row.

Starting in March 2020, Lasseter told a victim, a customer of his, to make payments to her premium but didn't apply them to her policy. Instead, he used her payments towards other customers without her knowledge or consent.

Lasseter would sometimes tell the victim to pay cash or make checks payable to him rather than Alfa Insurance, saying it was better for taxes.

In total, the victim made $221,515 in payments that were applied to other policies.

The prosecution argued Lasseter conducted the fraud to maintain his "Insurance Agent of the Year" title, an honor that granted perks and status.

The case was investigated by the FBI. Assistant U.S. Attorney Elizabeth Howard is prosecuting the case.

The money taken from the victim has had a significant negative impact.

PERRY — Did you know The Houston Home Journal has an in-house printing press?

An updated piece of equipment is setting the shop up for continued success amid growing print demands. The press room has recently acquired an insert machine.

The machine, a Mueller Martini 227, is a much-needed upgrade from the former 1970s-era inserter. Valued at about $35,000, it has eight available slots for inserts, the flyers inside the newspaper from stores and businesses.

The press room began operating the new machine on Nov. 12.

MANAGER

During his service, he was the recipient of multiple awards, including the Department of the Army Superior Civilian Award and a Joint Civilian Service Commendation Award. After his service, he returned to Perry and became the owner of a small cleaning service business.

Walker said they had a great time during the parade.

"It was really inspiring to see the number of people who came out and really gave honor to our veterans," he said.

Washington also presented a token of his appreciation — a decommissioned grenade. He shared the inscription, which says: "Thank you, city of Perry for embracing me and honoring my service. I'm so proud to call Perry, Georgia my hometown."

In August, the city urged the community to nominate local veterans for the ride-along. 11 veterans were nominated this year.

Other nominees included:

- Grady Auman
- James Self
- Jason Seaman
- Fred Bryant

Walker gave thanks to every veteran for their service.

"We cannot thank you enough for the freedoms that we enjoy in this country. It's because of your service that we enjoy them," he said.

Later in the council meeting, Robert Smith was named the new City Manager, a position previously held by Lee Gilmour.

Smith previously served as the Assistant City Manager and worked alongside Gilmour. As the City Manager, he facilitates effective communication between the city government, citizens, community organizations and institutions, and neighboring jurisdictions, including the state and federal governments.

Council members unanimously approved the resolution to appoint Smith.

Smith thanked Walker and council and appreciated their vote of confidence.

"[I] very much look forward to continuing doing the work of the people here at the city of Perry. It has been a tremendous experience so far and [I] look forward to working with all of you... and all of our wonderful employees and making sure that we continue to move forward here at the city of Perry," he said. "There are a lot of exciting things, a lot of challenges, a lot of opportunities but I think we're all up to the task. It's very exciting and very appreciative that you all name me your next city manager."

On the agenda, the city approved the installation of security cameras downtown. Council members also discussed this item during the Work Session on Monday night.

Police Chief Alan Everidge explained in 2023 that the city was awarded the Georgia Public Safety and Community Violence Reduction Grant. He said as part of this grant, the police department emphasized cameras in the city parks, city facilities, and areas where public events are hosted.

Due to the city hosting numerous events downtown, Everidge wants the area to remain safe. He proposed to add three cameras. Although it would not cover the entire footprint, he believes it will help deter crime.

Everidge believes the cameras could also help the police department in investigations. He said it could be used for hit-and-run or other major crimes.

The cameras will be placed at:

- Corner of Jernigan Street and Carroll Street

• Carroll Street at Ball Street

• Main Street at Ball Street

"We have a safe downtown. We are always looking for ways to do more with less. We believe this is a great opportunity to put this in at no cost," Everidge said.

The Mayor and Council will hold their pre-council meeting at 5 p.m. and the regular council meeting at 6 p.m. on December 2. Everyone is invited to attend these meetings, and the agenda can be found at <https://perry-ga.gov/escalate-agendas-minutes>. Both meetings are also livestreamed, and the full video is available at <https://www.youtube.com/@PerryComms>.

mined the integrity of the insurance industry and his deliberate scheme to redirect premium payments for his own gain is a clear violation of the law and a betrayal of the victim's trust," said Paul Brown, Special Agent in Charge of FBI Atlanta. "The FBI remains committed to holding individuals accountable who exploit others for personal benefit."

Johnnie Elizabeth Hittson

Johnnie Elizabeth Hittson (Lowe) (she preferred to be called Johnna because it sounded more like a girl's name,) passed away on Monday, November 17, 2025, at age 99.

Born on July 19, 1926, in Summittville, Tennessee, Johnna was the daughter of Beulah Elizabeth Prater and Cecil Hall Lowe. She grew up on a farm with six siblings. She was quite a tomboy, and her favorite activities were playing in the loft of the barn, skating on the pond in the winter, grooming her pet pig, and riding the family's mule, "Ole Blue".

Johnna was always eager to learn, and she had a passion for reading throughout her life. She graduated from Manchester Central High School during WWII. After graduation, she went to work at Camp Forrest and moved to Nashville, Tennessee, and went to work at Phillips & Buttorff, a company that built pontoon boats for the war effort. At the end of the war, her childhood sweetheart returned home, and they began dating. She married Buford Price Hittson in January 1947, and a year later they had a daughter named Mary Elizabeth, who was always called Libby.

In 1971, Johnna and her husband, Buford, moved to Warner Robins, Georgia, to be near their daughter. In 1972, Johnna went to work at Mercer University and began going to school full-time. While at Mercer, she received her bachelor's and master's degree cum laude.

When the officials at Mercer decided to build a medical school, Johnna became the assistant to the new dean. She did the grunt work that made it possible for the medical school to become a reality.

After Johnna's retirement from Mercer, she traveled all over the United States with her daughter and granddaughter, while her husband stayed at home and cared for the all the farm animals. When her husband died in 2003, she sold their farm and moved to Perry, Georgia, to live with her daughter and son-in-law. She loved Perry and thought it was the most beautiful town in America.

Johnna lived a remarkable life, but being a member of the church of Christ gave her the greatest joy. She became a member of the church when she was fourteen years old, and she remained faithful her entire life.

In addition to her husband and parents, Johnna was preceded in death by her brothers, Kenneth Lowe, Levoyd Lowe, Anthony Lowe, and her sister, Naomi Allen.

Johnna's memory will forever be treasured by her loving daughter, Libby, and her beloved son-in-law, Guy Chils; granddaughter, Amanda Crawford (Mike); and great-grandchildren, Addison Goings and Gavin Crawford; siblings; Betty Grissom and Jimmy Lowe (Gale); and a host of loving nieces and nephews.

Johnna requested cremation and no funeral services.

With honor, Burpee-Scott Memorial Chapel & Crematory has been entrusted with arrangements.

Raking pine straw & other things to be thankful for

NEW SOUTHERN DAD

KYLE DOMINY

I've shook out my fair share of bales of pine straw.

Shook out? Shaken? Let's go with spread. I've spread out my fair share of bales of pine straw, especially at this time of year.

With the onset of the holiday season, many people spruce up their front yards to impress the neighbors and family members they don't like. Nothing tells your spouse's family "I'm doing pretty good for myself these days. Who's the loser now?" like paying someone to clean up the flower beds. For many years this subdivision vanity lined my pockets with cash just in time for Christmas.

Of course, as a young man, while working in other people's yards, I day-dreamed about having my own house and the disposable income to pay someone to labor for me. Such is the ignorance of youth. Now that I've learned a thing or two about life, I miss those days, and, sometimes, that line of work, though my back may feel otherwise. Though it can't be worse than being hunched over a keyboard at a desk in my windowless dungeon day after day.

Sweat equity means to improve the value of your property by the work of your own two hands, and I try to relive my glorious manual labor days with projects around my own home. Now instead of wishing I could afford to hire someone to do it for me, I relish a long to-do list and am thankful I'm healthy enough to tackle it and have people to call on if I need assistance (Dad, I could use some help fixing a shower when you can spare a couple of hours).

Yes, this comes with occasional frustrations and sometimes a minor injury or two, even a torrent of words you can't, or at least shouldn't, say in church.

Once a year I even get to shake out, or rather spread, pine straw again. There are enough pine trees around the house that I don't have to buy straw, another thing I'm thankful for. A few minutes with the rake and I have more than enough to give my home a little holiday curb appeal, though no one can see it but my family and deer that cross my front yard each night.

Living in the woods is something to be thankful for. Having a family to live in the woods with ranks high on the thankful list, way above the deer, which I could take or leave. Big rats are all they are, and I hope many Thanksgiving tables are set with venison.

I pile my pine straw on a big tarp and drag it around the property. My back is still a little sore, and I'm thankful for that, too. A little pain is a good reminder that I'm still alive.

Wherever you find yourself, I hope it is a home, big or small, full of family, and maybe some fresh pine straw across the front, even if just for yourself.

Happy Thanksgiving.

Math is fun

I went to Georgia Tech, chances are you know that. I graduated from that fine college, with five calculus courses on my academic record, but it was brutal at first. Here is the first exam at the end of week one, as best as I remember it, in a calculus course known simply as 1308.

1308 pigeons, each weighing 1308 grams, fall a distance of 1308 meters, where they impact a train moving at 1308 meters/sec.

1. Calculate the total mass of the pigeons. Easy.

2. Calculate the velocity of the pigeons at impact. Tougher.

3. Calculate the total kinetic energy at impact. What?

Bonus 5 points: Within 1/10 of a degree, state the mean temperature of Boston Bay on July 4, 1976.

Amazingly, in law school and my 40 years as a lawyer, I've never used differential calculus. Or came close to needing it.

That being said, my computer science background at Tech was very helpful in my government career. When an IT professional told me they "couldn't" do something, I'd tell them how to do it. They stopped telling me "no," and appreciated that I knew exactly what I wanted and how to get there.

So I get that differential calculus, or thermal dynamics, or circuit analysis isn't for everybody, but thank goodness some people are smart enough to do that stuff. Because science, technology, engineering, and mathematics is vital to our national productivity. We are seventh in the world in labor productivity, but Ireland (#1) is 50% better than we are.

So call us Techies nerds if you want, but Techies invented WD-40, the NEXUS supercomputer, Google Glass, ISS (Internet Security Systems), and hundreds of other inventions that have transformed the world.

But for me, it was a rough start at Tech. I thought I was smart until I got there.

Enwheel the wagons! No more snollygosters in Merriam-Webster's new dictionary!

COLUMNIST

DICK YARBROUGH

Simply said, there is nothing like a good petrichor to make a guy feel on top of the world. That depends, of course, on my computer's teraflop since I'm WFH and not interested in ghost kitchens. In case you were wondering, those are among the 5,000 new words contained in the 12th edition of the Merriam-Webster collegiate dictionary coming out this week.

Between you and me, I would count ghost kitchens as two words, but I'm not about to get into a dispute with Merriam or with Webster. Lexicographers can also be acidulous, if not downright trenchant.

Speaking of lexicographers, I ran this information by my friends, Barney Funk and Porter Wagnalls, for their thoughts. The boys used to put out their own dictionaries until they discovered they could make more money selling aluminum siding. They suggested I take a shot at trying to master the approximately 171,476 words currently floating around in space before I tackle 5,000 new ones (or 5,001, if you count ghost kitchens as 2 words.) Lexicographers can also be acidulous, if not downright trenchant.

For Funk and Wagnalls' information, putting out carefully-crafted, cutting-edge, jaw-dropping incisive columns each and every week for your enjoyment and amazement is not as simple as I make it look. I use a lot of words including a bunch of nouns and verbs and an occasional conjunction and I don't need some pointy-heads jettisoning them just because they can. I find that so – pardon my language – inimically traducing.

It seems that just as I get you comfortable with, say, "enwheel," Merriam or Webster – I'm not sure which one – takes the word out of their dictionary and I am forced to go with the more pedestrian "encircle," which I am sure doesn't impress you and makes you ask yourself if this guy is really cutting-edge. After all, anybody can be encircled, but only in this space could you ever be enwheelied.

And how am I going to discuss current events in Washington or under the Gold Dome without snollygoster as a fundamental descriptor of political discourse? For those of you who haven't been paying close attention, a snollygoster is defined – or was before Merriam and Webster decided to go all politically-correct on us – as a "shrewd, unprincipled person, particularly a politician guided by personal gain rather than principles." When I think of snollygosters, the Okefenokee National Wildlife Refuge jumps to mind. Who else but snollygosters would consider approving drilling for toothpaste whitener in our Okefenokee? I think you would agree the very thought of that is simply persecutory, if not downright rebarbative.

Falling out of bed

I suffered a nearly serious accident a few years ago. What was it? Well, I fell out of bed.

I was getting back into bed around 6 A.M. one morning. I removed my bedroom shoes and slid into bed. As I did, I turned my head—shifting my center of gravity—to check the time. The clock read 5:55 A.M. I wasn't far enough on the bed, so I started sliding. I was powerless to stop it, so down to the floor I plummeted.

The mattress is about three feet from the floor. On the way down, my arm hit the lamp table and the back of my head hit the side board of bed. I landed on my backside. Beverly, my wife, rushed to me. Other than feeling like a Mack truck hit me, my head was hurting and my arm was bleeding. After Beverly helped me up, I could tell I hadn't broken my back.

Since I take blood thinner, I was worried about internal bleeding inside my brain. Beverly urged me to go to the hospital, but I elected to monitor my condition. Beverly helped clean up the blood on my arm and bandage my lacerations.

PARABLES TO PONDER

BILLY POWELL

Since I made it through the next several days without ill effects, I didn't seek medical attention.

Since this was quite a spill for an 84-year-old man at that time, I believe that God and His mighty angels superintended my fall and kept me from serious injury. In another sense, it just wasn't my time to go. Evidently, I have more work to do. I have always believed in angels and feel these unseen creatures played a key role in keeping me from serious harm.

I searched the scriptures to find examples of angels sparing someone. I found a number of scriptural accounts. In Daniel 6 we find King Darius of Persia ordering Daniel to be thrown into the lion's den. When the king returned the next morning, He found Daniel unharmed.

Darius asked Daniel how he escaped death. Daniel replied, "My God sent His angel and shut the lions' mouths, so they could not harm me."

King David's life was fraught with danger and death threats. In the 23rd Psalm, David credits God, saying: "Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for you are with me." The scripture asserts: "The angel of the Lord encamps around those who fear him and delivers them."

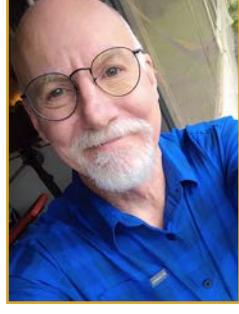

During the arrest of Jesus in Gethsemane, His disciple cut off an arrester's ear with a sword. The Master said, "Put up your sword. I can summon the Father and He will send twelve legions of angels to defend Me."

Imagine the awesome power of 60,000 angels!

Say watt! LED astray by scammers

HHJ PUBLISHER

DON MONCRIEF

So, I got scammed. They actually targeted The Houston Home Journal but I got caught up in the crossfire due to my position.

It was like this. Several weeks ago I received a call from a young-sounding, friendly, lady.

Her: "Do you order the lightbulbs for your organization?"

Me: "I do, but I typically just run down to Ace Hardware, Lowe's or Home Depot to get them."

Her: "That's fine. We just want to send you our catalog of lighting so you can see our great selection and prices."

Me: "That's fine."

She confirmed the address, all seemed okay.

About two weeks after that I was in Atlanta at the Georgia National Trust for Local News's summit when I received a call. I ignored it went to voice mail.

"Hey, this is John (can't remember his last name). I really need to get in touch with you ASAP."

I texted back at the office to one of my coworkers.

"Hey, would you give this guy a call and see what he wants?"

She did. A text followed: "He says he needs to talk to you."

So, we were in the process of having an insert machine delivered to us from Colorado. (Normally like $60,000. We got it for $4,000 and it is expected to improve our efficiency significantly. Note: It's on station and as of Wednesday of last week was up and running.) My mind said: "This must be about the move. I need to call him." I did.

John: "I just wanted to confirm that so and so called you and offered to send you our latest catalog."

Me, to myself: "Crap. This is a blooming scam!"

Me: "Yes, she did." I hurriedly got off the phone ... "I've got to get back to class ..." and thought that was the end of it.

Monday of last week I received a letter from them, Central Industries, Inc. "Dear customer, Thank you for allowing us to discuss our company's cutting-edge products. We appreciate the trust you have placed in our company and value your decision to evaluate and hopefully purchase our product."

For the record. None of that conversation took place.

It got worse as the letter, after continuing on in their imaginary conversation, went on to say I had approved of the order — the catalog, yes, but order, heck to the no. Further, three paragraphs in it said they were going to send me a trial order of their bulbs (complete with their 20-year extended service guarantee), six bulbs, $119.98 apiece, $38.05 freight and handling, for a grand total of $757.93!

I went to the Better Business Bureau site to see what it had to say. Yep. There they were. Complaint after complaint after complaint. Same thing. Either they were victimized by opening the door by agreeing to receive a catalog or just the simple fact they talked to them was proof enough in Central Industries' eyes to send the samples. (Per the complainants, they also don't answer their phone or respond to emails and one who did open the box said the lightbulbs were small and looked like they plus, and it's beyond me why they haven't already been investigated and shut down, I'm going to send a copy of this column to all of the 25 newspapers we print throughout the state.

They say they're all about light, well, I'll give them what they want and shed a little bit of it on them. Free of charge.

Mysterious & alluring cameos

From the opulent salons of Victorian England to the sun-baked sands of ancient Egypt, one piece of jewelry has remained an enduring symbol of status and beauty: the cameo. These miniature sculptures, typically featuring a figure or scene in relief against a contrasting background, hold a history as intricate as their carving. But what truly makes a desirable cameo, and how did a simple carved shell become a must-have accessory for a Queen?

The very origins of the word "cameo" remain elusive. Some suggest it's Italian, or perhaps stems from the Old French camaieu or the Old Latin cammaeus. Even the ancient Arabic word for amulet, khamea, has been proposed. While etymologists debate its parentage, the popularity of the physical object is indisputable.

The earliest known cameos predate written history. As far back as five thousand years ago, ancient Egyptians and Mesopotamians were crafting these tiny reliefs from stone and glass. Later, the Roman author Pliny the Elder even noted the existence of glass cameos as costume jewelry—the accessible alternative for those who couldn't afford pieces cut from precious gems like agate.

While stone and glass held ancient precedence, the lighter, more dramatic shell cameo—prized for its naturally occurring layers of contrasting color—found its true zenith much later. Emerging in popularity during the Renaissance, the art exploded into a worldwide phenomenon in the Victorian era.

British Victorians, particularly, were utterly captivated by all things Italian. The era's essential journey for the elite—the "Grand Tour"—ensured that travelers returned home with one indispensable souvenir: an

ALL ABOUT ANTIQUES

JILLINDA FALEN

Italian-carved cameo. Even Queen Victoria herself routinely adorned herself with the pieces, instantly cementing their status as a necessary accessory for every middle- and upper-class woman on both sides of the Atlantic.

The archetypal Victorian cameo is the profile of a woman, often with elaborately styled hair. The most coveted pieces were those that depicted the figure with jewelry—a necklace, earring, or diadem—known as habillé (meaning "dressed" or "clad").

Collectors should look closely at the details. Cameos with round cheeks and an aquiline (Roman) nose are typically 19th-century. Those with prominent cheekbones and a pug nose often signify 20th-century origins. Whether shell, hardstone, or glass, the finer the features and sharper and deeper the detail, the better the cameo.

Beyond the common shell, cameos were carved from a dazzling array of materials, each prized for different qualities:

• Hardstone Cameos: These pieces, typically smaller and cut from materials like banded agate or sardonyx, yield spectacular, high-contrast images. Sardonyx, in particular, with its parallel layers of brown/red alternating with white/black, allows master carvers to expose multiple color gradations, creating astonishing depth.

• Lava Cameos: These simple, monochrome pieces, often made of igneous rock, are easily carved and less expensive than shell or hardstone, making them a popular souvenir of a traveler's Italian trip. Unfortunately, their fragility means fewer have survived to the modern day.

• Monochrome Marvels: Materials like coral (especially the red Corallium rubrum favored by Victorians), jet, and ivory were used to create striking single-color pieces.

Today, collectors face a new challenge: distinguishing a unique, hand-carved piece—which can take a carver months to complete—from a mass-produced duplicate.

Since the mid-20th century, the process of ultrasound cutting has become widespread. While technically still cameos, these pieces are made from a hand-carved template and are mere clones.

A jeweler's loupe provides the definitive clue:

Hand-Carved: Reveals growth lines, tool marks, and undercutting—a technique that adds dimension and depth.

Machine-Made: Displays uniform, parallel striations or tracks across the entire surface, lacking the nuanced depth of human artistry.

The market is flooded with these mass-produced pieces often sold as authentic. As one expert notes, unless one seeks an inexpensive novelty, "make sure you are not paying hand-carved prices" for a clone that was completed in minutes rather than months. Happy Collecting!

SUDOKU

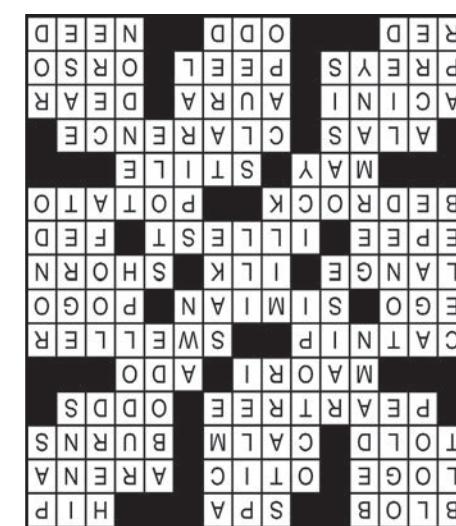

Here's How It Works:
Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

last quarter. For expenses, George said no department in the county is over budget. Total expenditures are a total of $17 million this quarter, compared to $19.6 million last quarter.

For E-911, revenue was down about $2 million, with expenditures being at $1.1 million. George said the fire revenue is almost the same as last quarter, with expenditures increased to $1.8 million compared to $1 million last quarter.

Water fund revenue increased from $3.6 million to $4.1 million. George said they expected to see an increase due to the increased water rates.

The revenue in the solid waste fund is down to $1.1 million, compared to last quarter at $1.6 million. George said the reason for this is due to county residents picking the services of their choice.

"A lot have picked just the basic service, so it has cost them less and our revenue has gone down because of that in tune of about $425,000," she said.

George added that their landfill use revenue has increased due to a rise in landfill fees.

"I think it's a very good quarter, especially because none of our departments are over budget," she said.

Chairman Dan Perdue said this is the first time the county has presented a quarterly financial report in a public meeting.

In the old business, the Board took action on two annexations that were tabled at the Nov. 4 meeting. Both of these annexations take place on Lake Joy Road, the first being 7.45 acres on Lake Joy and Duskmoe Drive.

Commissioner Shane Gottwals made a motion to non-concur with this annexation, due to density concerns and the change of zoning from existing to commercial.

"To be clear, this will give more time to find the best solution," Gottwals said.

Perdue pointed out that the county has combined ordinances, making commercial development very difficult.

"The county restricts commercial access from primarily residential roads which Duskmoe is, and the city does not desire any more curb cuts along Lake Joy which is understandable," he said. "That would restrict commercial access to this piece of property which then, in turn, may conflict with the fire code which would necessitate access in an easier fashion into a possible commercial development."

The Board voted unanimously to non-concur with this annexation.

One citizen spoke against the annexation and said that the neighborhood had no reason to deny any residential development on the property; however, the commercial aspect of the development is not something they agree with.

"I am very grateful for you wanting to take more time and consider this. We really appreciate it," the citizen said.

The Board concurred with a similar annexation on Lake Joy Road containing almost 26 acres.

Commissioner Tal Talton said the stipulations would be that the City of Warner Robins would sign an infrastructure agreement, a water study done to ensure the water mains are correctly sized for the delivery of fire flow, a traffic study to determine the impacts to Lake Joy Road and Beulah Church intersection, and all county utilities would stay with the county.

Gottwals expressed support for the annexation, saying it was a best-case scenario.

"This is just one of those things where a lot of work went into it since it was brought forward, and this is an example of getting to the best outcome possible," Gottwals said. "On the surface, the vote isn't the favorable one for many, but I am very confident that this is the best outcome for this property," he said.

The next Houston County Commissioners meeting will be held Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 9 a.m., located at the Houston County Courthouse. The full agenda of this meeting can be found at www.houstoncountyga.gov/minutes/2025-11-18%20Department%20Head%20Copy.pdf thing going on in the world right now, it is a time to look inward and be empathetic to the less fortunate.

"He says that we give honor to Him by taking care of each other as ourselves and as Him, so we're all one," she said. "I wasn't hungry, but I knew people were hungry and on the brink of going hungry and that affected me."

Edmund shared the same sentiment and said it takes a village to help out your community.

"If somebody in your village is in need, we come together to make sure the mothers, fathers and the children have something to eat or clothes to wear," she said. "We're going to help them this holiday season and even when it's not in season, and we're going to be there for them because with the time and day that we're in, we have to stick together."

The insert machine provides a more efficient way to insert flyers. HHJ Publisher Don Moncrief said on average, inserting two or three flyers previously took nearly an hour and a half for the press's largest publication, The Albany Herald. With the new machine, production has been shortened to 30 minutes.

"This equipment will complement our press in providing the highest quality product our customers and readers across the state could receive," he said.

The National Trust for Local News, the HHJ's parent company, bought the insert machine and had it delivered from Nebraska. Moncrief said the former inserter was too difficult to maintain.

"Our old machine was so outdated we couldn't get parts for it or have maintenance done to it," Moncrief said.

The Houston Home Journal currently prints 23 publications in its press shop, and with print shops closing down, demand is growing for the Perry press.

"We have also been approached by a number of other newspapers who have requested we print their newspapers. This will allow us to take on and print those newspapers," Moncrief said.

He said the purchase reflects the Trust's commitment to supporting local journalism.

"Being a part of the Georgia Trust for Local News, which is, along with the Colorado Trust for Local News and the Maine Trust for Local News, a part of the big picture — the National Trust for Local News — this demonstrates their commitment to not only sustainability for local newspapers, but also growth," he said.

More upgrades are budgeted for the press room. In the meantime, Moncrief said the people working the press, and the newspaper as a whole, are the bread and butter of the HHJ's success.

"Equipment is one thing, but it's [our employees] who are actually our reason for success — not just from a press room standpoint, but also our news and our advertising and our layout and administrative folks. They are truly remarkable to see in action," he said.

Moncrief said the press is open to tours.

"If any school classrooms or church groups, or whoever, want to tour our facility, please give me a call," he said.

So, out with the old words and in with the new. The new Merriam-Webster Collegiate Dictionary has added within its pages such terms as "adulting" (the act or practice of attending to the ordinary tasks required of a responsible adult) which no one in Washington seems capable of doing these days. And there is "rizz" (romantic appeal or charm), "doomscroll" (excessive time online scrolling through news or other content that makes one feel sad, anxious, angry, etc.) and "dad bod" (slightly overweight and not extremely muscular.) But nothing about "mom bod" which I think Merriam and Webster both decided would get them the "side eye," (a sidelong glance or gaze of scorn, suspicion, disapproval) from the Woke crowd.

With all due respect to Merriam and to Webster, too, chances of seeing these new words in this space are pretty doggoned dubitable. I don't know what was wrong with the old ones. I don't feel the need to be trendy or to use big words to try and wow you. That would be mendacious and I am sure you would find it eristical.

Besides, it doesn't take multi-syllable words to get the wingnuts on both sides of the political spectrum in a tizzy which gives meaning to my life. Without humorless RITNOs (Republicans in Trump's Name Only) and liberal weenies who think for some reason that boy prisoners should be allowed to be girl prisoners and vice versa, I would be just another fallow belletrist. Perish the thought.

By the way, if it slipped past you in the opening paragraph, petrichor is a pleasant odor after a rain-storm. Teraflop is a unit of measure for calculating the speed of a computer. WFH means working from home and ghost kitchens are facilities that prepare foods to be eaten off the premises. But I suspect you already knew that. You, dear reader, are as perspicacious as you are fervid. That's a simple fact.

"Partnering with [Kleckley] and seeing her drive and what she wants to do, gave me back life. I just told her, 'Tell me your vision, and I can make anything that comes to your mind a reality,'" Edmund said. "We have stuff planned together up until 2027."

Kleckley thinks it is important to help those in need during this holiday season and said it's most important to reach out in her community and do God's work. She believes that with everything going on in the world right now, it is a time to look inward and be empathetic to the less fortunate.

Pinnacle Financial Corporation and Morris State Bancshares jointly announce partnership to form a leading Georgia community bank

Special to The Journal

ELBERTON & DUBLIN (BUSINESS WIRE) — Pinnacle Financial Corporation ("Pinnacle"), the holding company for Pinnacle Bank, and Morris State Bancshares, Inc. ("Morris") (OTCQX: MBLU), the holding company for Morris Bank, jointly announced today a strategic combination of two of Georgia's strongest community banks. Based upon each company's financial condition as of September 30, 2025, the combined company will have $3.8 billion in assets, $3.3 billion in deposits and $2.8 billion in loans, and will operate 35 branches throughout many of Georgia's fastest growing markets.

Commenting on the announcement, Jackson McConnell, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Pinnacle, said, "We are excited to announce the combination of Pinnacle Bank and Morris Bank. As we unite our two institutions, we strengthen our ability to serve people and businesses in communities across the state of Georgia. After years of knowing one another and working together on industry issues, we are thrilled to bring our teams together. More than ever before, this partnership allows us to focus on continued growth by sharing our core banking services with more community customers."

Spence Mullis, Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer of Morris, said, "I've known both Jackson McConnell and David Voyles for more than 20 years and have watched them build and grow a great community bank in their markets, while we've done the same with Morris in our markets. Over the years, we've often compared notes, sharing strategies and philosophies on how to keep our communities and customers at the heart of everything we do. Our leadership teams have weathered all types of economic cycles, including the Great Financial Crisis, often conferring and collaborating along the way, which has strengthened both of our organizations. I am truly excited to now bring our two teams together under one new name and brand, solidifying our shared values and long-standing relationship. Together, we'll be a leading Georgia community bank the entire state can be proud to call its own."

Transaction Details:

Under the terms of the definitive agreement, which has been unanimously approved by the Boards of Directors of Pinnacle and Morris, each outstanding share of Morris common stock will be exchanged for the right to receive 0.1095 shares of the combined company's common stock. Additionally, Morris' shareholders will receive a one-time special cash dividend of $0.54 per share prior to the closing of the transaction. As a result of the combination, Pinnacle's shareholders will own approximately 54% of the outstanding common shares of the new company, and Morris' shareholders will own approximately 46% of the outstanding common shares of the new company.

Name, Branding, Headquarters and Markets:

The companies plan to unveil a new unified name and logo for the combined bank and company prior to the closing of the transaction. Upon completion of the merger, the combined company's common stock will begin trading on the OTCQX under a new ticker symbol to be determined at a later date.

The combined organization's corporate headquarters will be located in Elberton, Georgia. Executives and team members of both companies will continue to operate from their existing offices.

The combined bank's footprint will include Pinnacle's 26 branches serving the northeast and eastern side of the state including Elberton, Gainesville, Athens and Augusta. The combined footprint will also include Morris' nine branches in central and southeastern Georgia markets including Dublin, Macon, Houston County and Statesboro.

Timing and Approvals:

The transaction is expected to close at the end of the first quarter or early second quarter of 2026, subject to satisfaction of customary closing conditions, including the receipt of required regulatory approvals and approvals from Morris shareholders.

Advisors:

Piper Sandler & Co. acted as exclusive financial advisor to Pinnacle. Fenimore Kay Harrison LLP acted as legal counsel to Pinnacle. Keefe, Bruyette and Woods, A Stifel Company, acted as financial advisor to Morris and delivered a fairness opinion to its Board of Directors. Alston & Bird LLP served as legal counsel to Morris.

BBB offers top tips to outsmart porch pirates and delivery scams

BBB TIPS

KELVIN COLLINS

The holidays are fast approaching, and with that comes spikes in reports to BBB Scam Tracker regarding delivery-related scams and "porch pirates" — thieves who brazenly steal delivered items right off your front step or porch.

Con artists are aware that many people anticipate package deliveries during this season, making them less likely to question messages about delivery issues. Additionally, thieves recognize that more packages will be left unattended on home porches and steps. These scenarios make people more vulnerable to package and delivery scams during the holiday season.

Fortunately, your BBB has several tips to help you identify and avoid delivery-related issues so you can focus on enjoying the holidays with family and friends:

Watch for phishing texts or emails claiming to be from delivery companies. It can be hard to tell a valid delivery text from a bogus one, but there are common red flags to watch for. The bogus messages usually claim that the shipper is having difficulty delivering a package or needs an update to your delivery preferences. In either case, a "tracking link" is included, and that's where the issues come in.

By clicking on a link in a message from an unknown or unexpected sender, you could be taken to a form that's designed to gain personal information and steal your identity. A link could also lead you to a site that downloads malware onto your computer or phone without you detecting it. This could include a virus or even spyware that allows scammers to gather your keystrokes. As you log into your accounts, including your bank accounts, they could be tracking your login information.

Beware of fake "missed delivery" tags or similar calls. With these scams, someone places a note on your door that claims they're having challenges delivering a package to you. They ask you to call a phone number or visit a website to reschedule your delivery, but it's actually another trick to deceive you into sharing your personal information.

In similar cases, you might receive a phone call from someone claiming to be with a legitimate delivery company. Your caller ID could even show that they're calling from a well-known delivery business — but a delivery company will rarely call you. Caller ID spoofing apps are readily available and often used by scammers to change their info and trick you into believing you're being contacted by a trustworthy company.

You can take several precautions to ensure a safe delivery of your orders and gifts:

Always get delivery tracking numbers and check the shipping progress periodically. If you've ordered gifts that will be delivered to your home or directly to family and friends, be sure you always get delivery tracking numbers and check the shipping progress periodically.

BASKETBALL

Veterans' Francesca Jones, Warner Robins' Gavyn Williams among others facing new, elevated roles after key departures

By CLAY BROWN
HHJ Sports Editor
hhjsports@gmail.com

The nature of high school sports is that there's constant turnover as players come in, reach their peak and graduate, leaving others to fill that void and go through the same cycle.

With basketball that effect can feel exaggerated because of the roster size.

Football can have nearly 100 participants on varsity alone. Baseball and softball, while having more players on the field at once, can have anywhere from 15 to almost 30 players.

A high school basketball team is lucky to have a full 15, much less that many to actually play on varsity.

One player graduating can shift the dynamic of an entire team, much less multiple.

Francesca Jones and the Veterans girls are feeling that the most after losing four starters and five players over the offseason.

Jones mostly served a bench role last year, helping to keep things running smoothly while Nariah Nelson, Jessie Ortiz and the other starters were off the floor.

Now as one of the most experienced players on the team she (as well as Ayonna Scott) will be asked to do much more.

"We've both seen what it's taken to go to state playoffs," Jones said of her and Scott. "I would say we've both had to step into bigger roles this year and just lead the girls as far as on and off the court. Showing them where to go and what to do."

One of the differences the two noted, though, was that the team will operate different from last year.

The Lady Warhawks relied heavily on the scoring output of Nelson, the three-point shooting and ball handling of Ortiz and defense and rebounding from Addyson McClendon.

This year, Scott and Jones believe, will be more of a round table with everyone contributing.

"Last year we was all really depending on one of our key players, but this year is different because we have to work together," Scott said. "The younger girls, they're really not used to playing with someone who scored a lot of points, so it's kind of easier for them to understand versus us, we had to get used to it."

"I would say we definitely had to depend on some key players last year. But this year it's more of a unit I would say," Jones said. "It's not like one person doing this on the court, but rather five strong players on the court. We all have to be playing together and feeding off of each other. That includes being able to execute an offense because there won't always be a game where we can have one person just go and drop 30 [points]."

The Warner Robins boys are going through a similar transition with the losses of Gabe Jacobs, Trey Bradley and Justin Hill who were just a few of eight graduating seniors.

For the last several years the Demons have had an "alpha" entering the season. Cam Perkins and Jay Johnson served that role in 2023 and Jacobs in 2024. Now they don't have that firm hierarchy, but they do have players fighting for that top spot.

The two players head coach Jamaal Garman brought with him to the Houston County Basketball Media Day were senior Gavyn Williams and junior Tyler Harris.

Both were complimentary players last year, with Williams playing primarily as a Three-and-D guard and Harris as a wing defender around the basket.

They have acknowledged that this year they will have much more asked of them not just on the court, but as leaders and examples off the court.

"Now all the young boys look up to me so I gotta make sure I'm doing right by [the coaches] and right by me," Williams said. "Every day I come here and represent that Demon head in the middle of the floor."

"I've been staying in the gym. I worked on my shot a lot because last year I had a role where I didn't need to take as many shots, but I know this year that I have to shoot the ball," Harris said. "So I've been working on my shot a lot, my basketball IQ, still staying with my rebounding and my defense. So I've been in the gym."

The Veterans boys, too, are getting a facelift as Brandon Driggers takes over the program and they lose Tristan Abner, Aiden Sweenor and others.

In the last two years Houston County has seen six new head coaches take over programs. As they transition, players will have to learn and adapt, too.

Houston County schools have exciting young players coming through the basketball pipeline

By CLAY BROWN
HHJ Sports Editor
clay@hhjonline.com

Although select upper-classmen like Houston County's Malik Gillespie and Veterans' Francesca Jones might dominate the narrative this season, there are plenty of up-and-coming young players to keep an eye on as the year progresses.

Some, like Perry's Kam Thomas, got a lot of playing time last year due to necessity. Head coach Mark Gainous isn't afraid to put younger players on the court especially if they show a commitment to basketball like Thomas has.

"Kam has really improved. He'll have a chance to be the starting point guard for Perry High School as a sophomore and I credit the AAU organization Warner Robins All-Stars for developing those guys," Gainous said. "I've seen a big difference in Christian Grant and Kam Thomas."

Warner Robins, who has historically been the premier program in the county, will have to start leaning on some youth this season too.

Last year's roster had eight seniors. The year before that had six. This year it's just Gavyn Williams and Rykeem Ashley who both served bench roles last year.

Tristan Warren and Kam Schmitz are two names that have been circulating since last season and now their varsity readiness will be put to the test as they'll be asked to soak up real minutes.

The Perry girls program has a trio of freshmen coming in from Perry Middle School's eighth grade championship last season. They were a suffocating defense down the street and have potential to blossom if coach Austin McIntyre's culture of intensity and competitiveness takes in the Panther Pit.

Rhazyah Oliver, Jakayla Keene and Layla De Jesus are three names to keep tabs on this year.

Houston County, who's been challenging the Demons for best boy's program in recent years, has some players coming in from Feagin Mill Middle School that Buddy Bivins thinks can make contributions right away with football players and injuries forcing the Bears to reach deeper into their bench.

Keelyn Johnson impressed Georgia Middle School Hoops with his all-around skillset last year and Bivins said he'll be thrown into the fire.

Damin Blasingame surprised Bivins with how he came out during training camp, and he could see the floor early. Kell Stevens was another name mentioned for HoCo.

Across the region the Veterans girls are leaning heavily on young players with the loss of five players including four starters.

Sophomore Kiersten Rogers might be the most interesting with her athletic ability, but she will be out early from an off-season injury.

Camila Vicioso, though she's a junior now, showed potential as a forward who could handle the ball last season. She'll be in a much bigger role this year.

Then there's the Northside boys. They have five seniors this year and return three starters from their best season in about a decade, but they also have some exciting young prospects.

Caden Lowe is the biggest name, he's turned heads with his athletic ability and defensive talent since he was at Thomson Middle School.

Assistant coach Anthony Stewart said Lowe is already one of the better defenders in the program, and is physically ready to be implemented right now.

Freshman Kingston Allen transferred from Central Fellowship Christian Academy over the summer and has garnered praise for his attitude and coach ability.

There are a lot of upper-classmen that will bear the brunt of their team's expectations, but Houston County has plenty of young, exciting talent coming through the pipeline.

AVOID OVEREATING BY TAPPING INTO CHILDHOOD FOODS & HABITS

grain bread: Add avocado for a boost of healthy fats that improve heart health, among many other benefits.

PB&J on whole-grain bread with sliced bananas: This extra source of potassium in your sandwich can significantly help improve blood pressure, heart health, and digestive health.

As you get older, it can be harder to fall into that natural rhythm. You get cravings, develop healthy and unhealthy eating habits, and may even let your emotions take over. By reconnecting with your childhood instincts and finding a way to reimagine nostalgic foods, you can bring balance and joy back into your daily diet.

1. Pay Attention to Natural Hunger Cues

Children are pros at intuitive eating, and you can be, too. When eating, slow down and pay attention to subtle signals from your body: Perhaps your next bite doesn't taste as exciting, your stomach feels comfortably full (not overly so), or you find yourself pausing between bites. Using smaller plates or serving yourself smaller portions, setting your fork down while you're chewing, or sipping water can help you check in with your body before you go back for seconds.

2. Reimagine Nostalgic Foods

All your favorite childhood meals, like grilled cheese and PB&Js, don't have to be a thing of the past. With just a few tweaks, you can make them nourishing everyday meals. Consider:

• Grilled cheese using whole-

Yogurt parfaits with fresh berries and granola

Sandwiches with a scoop of sauerkraut (or kimchi for a burst of tang and spice)

Even these minor changes will make your comfort foods both delicious and restorative.

5. Rethink Snacking as Intentional Fuel

When you were a kid, snacks were more structured. You'd have a snack in between classes as a way to reenergize yourself, or a snack before homework when you got home from school. You can adopt this style of snacking and consider them as mini meals throughout the day. Consider snacks that are high in protein, like cheese and crackers, vegetables with hummus, or fruit with peanut butter. Snacking this way helps keep your energy levels up and prevents mindless grazing that can lead to overeating.

Simple Eating, Long-lasting Joy

Going back to childhood eating isn't about reliving the past; it's about reintroducing simplicity and balance to your diet. By paying attention to your body, reinventing nostalgic foods, and eating with joy, you can avoid overeating and feel more satisfied after every bite. If you take the time and make the effort to eat more intentionally, meals become less about habit and more about health, happiness, and connection.

Museum of Aviation reopens following federal government shutdown

By BRIEANNA SMITH
HHJ Managing Editor
brianna@hhjonline.com

WARNER ROBINS — The Museum of Aviation reopened its doors this month after the federal government shutdown ended, allowing staff to resume normal operations and welcome visitors.

The museum announced its reopening in a Facebook post on Nov. 14, writing, "The Museum of Aviation is officially back open to the public! We are grateful for your patience and support during the government shutdown. Our team is excited to welcome you through the doors again to explore, learn, and be inspired."

Although the museum itself was temporarily closed, the Museum of Aviation Foundation continued operating throughout the shutdown. In an earlier update, the museum noted that while the Air Force-operated facility was closed to the public, the foundation "continues to operate as usual, supporting our STEM education programs, special events, and fundraising efforts that sustain this incredible national treasure."

"Our dedicated Foundation team remains hard at work advancing the Museum's mission: to educate, inspire, and honor through flight and innovation," the post continued. "We appreciate your continued support and understanding during this time."

The reopening is welcome news for local families, school groups and tourists who rely on the museum as a major educational and recreational destination. As one of the region's most-visited attractions, the Museum of Aviation draws thousands each month for field trips, STEM programs and military history tours.

The museum's FY23 report counted approximately 342,000 visitors, making it the fourth-most-visited museum in the U.S. Department of Defense.

With the reopening, the museum is gearing up for several upcoming events, including Planes and Trains from Nov. 23–30 and the annual Festival of Trees from Nov. 19–Dec. 28.

The Museum of Aviation is open Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

More information is available at museumofaviation.org.

Secretary of the Air Force Troy Meink administered the oath of office. Wilsbach was confirmed by the U.S. Senate on Thursday, Oct. 30 by unanimous consent.

"I want to welcome General Wilsbach as the 24th Chief of Staff of the Air Force," said

Meink. "With his vast experience in the Pacific and as a commander at all levels, he is the right leader for the Air Force. Arnold AFB discoveries support AFMC History and Heritage Program

By Brad Hicks
AEDC Public Affairs

ARNOLD AIR FORCE BASE, Tenn. --

By anyone's best guess, the pair of aircraft canopies were most likely slated to be pelted with propelled poultry at Arnold Air Force Base.

Fate had other plans.

Instead, the two F-16 Fighting Falcon cockpit covers, along with a fractured F-4 Phantom II canopy and a drone engine from the 1980s, were boxed up and kept in a warehouse at Arnold AFB, headquarters of Arnold Engineering Development Complex.

The items remained in storage, days turning to weeks, weeks to years and years to decades.

Recently, though, the materials found a landing spot beyond warehouse shelves and crates encapsulating them for so long. Several of items were shipped to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, headquarters of Air Force Materiel Command, to be maintained by the AFMC History and Heritage Program.

Katy McCowan, senior logistics analyst for the AEDC Test Operations and Sustainment contractor, became aware of the items several years ago, as they were listed on a spreadsheet she received upon taking over test material storage at Arnold. The items were held in the warehouse used to store test materials where they had presumably been kept since the late 1980s or early 1990s.

When McCowan first learned of the existence of these items, there was ample space in the facility, so those responsible for management of the warehouse left the materials be.

Team members again encountered the items recently while cleaning out some space in the warehouse.

The spreadsheet previously provided to McCowan provided no specifics on the intended purpose of the items, and no such information was found within the boxes containing them.

"To the best of our knowledge, the canopies may have been slated for the 'chicken gun' testing," McCowan said.

The S-3 Bird Impact Range at Arnold, more famously known as the "chicken gun," was used to test windshield materials and full-scale canopies for various military and commercial aircraft. Chicken carcasses were fired at the range to simulate in-flight bird strikes to test articles. Such tests were conducted to research the damage caused by avian collisions and to prevent harm to aircrew members.

The chicken gun was first fired in 1972. The last tests involving it occurred in the early 2000s.

McCowan said she and other Materials Management personnel

An F-16 Fighting Falcon aircraft canopy is pictured in a warehouse at Arnold Air Force Base, Tenn. It is believed the canopy was slated to be used in bird strike testing at the S-3 Bird Impact Range at Arnold, more famously known as the "Chicken Gun," but the canopy ended up not being used in such testing. Several canopies and a drone engine from the 1980s stored in the warehouse since the late 1980s to early 1990s were shipped this summer to the Air Force Materiel Command History and Heritage Directorate for possible display.

could offer no conjecture on the intended purpose of the drone motor. The broken F-4 canopy, referred to by those involved as the "Romero canopy" due to the "Capt. Romero" marking on its frame, appears to have either been salvaged from an ejection or, more likely, represents the remnants of chicken gun testing.

These links to our heritage are a great way to give people a physical representation of the history. It's not just listening or reading, it's seeing, and that translates to an experience."

The items were shipped to the AFMC History and Heritage Directorate over the summer. Sloat said the team there accepted all of the items and relayed their intent to use several of the items in hallway and lobby displays, particularly the drone motor because of its size and link to both the past and the future.

"I love that a piece of our history here at AEDC is going to be displayed," McCowan said. "I'm glad this worked out so well and I was part of the process."

McCowan said Materials Management team members are continuing to excess and clean up old materials located in Arnold warehouses and laydown yard to prepare for future growth at the base. She is calling on personnel across Arnold to aid these efforts should materials team make contact. The knowledge shared may give additional articles discovered new life as well.

"There are so many items that have been forgotten by time," McCowan said. "Unfortunately, listed contacts for these materials have retired or moved on. We are doing our best to find people who can help us, but it can be a struggle."

"Our biggest request is that if someone in Materials Management reaches out to you for assistance, please respond to us and be willing to help in our ongoing effort."

Air Force validates reliability, readiness of ICBM force with Minuteman III test launch

An unarmed Minuteman III Intercontinental Ballistic Missile launches during an operational test at 01:35 a.m. Pacific Time Nov. 5, 2025, at Vandenberg Space Force Base, Calif. ICBM systems require regular testing to verify system performance and identify any potential issues. Data gathered from Glory Trip 254 helps to identify and mitigate potential risks, ensuring the continued accuracy and reliability of the ICBM force.

BARKSDALE AIR FORCE BASE, La. --

Air Force Global Strike Command conducted a test launch of an unarmed Minuteman III intercontinental ballistic missile from Vandenberg Space Force Base, California, on Nov. 5, 2025. This test, designated Glory Trip 254, evaluated the ongoing reliability, operational readiness and accuracy of the ICBM system, a cornerstone of America's national defense.

A team of AFGSC Airmen with the 625th Strategic Operations Squadron, employing the Airborne Launch Control System from aboard a U.S. Navy E-6B Mercury aircraft, initiated the launch, testing the effectiveness and continuous availability of the ALCS, a backup command-and-control system for the ICBM force.

"GT 254 is not just a launch – it's a comprehensive assessment to verify and validate the ICBM system's ability to perform its critical mission," said Lt. Col. Karrie Wray, commander of the 576th Flight Test Squadron. "The data collected during the test is invaluable in ensuring the continued reliability and accuracy of the ICBM weapon system."

The Western Test Range at Vandenberg SFB serves as the testing ground for this critical effort. This launch is part of a series of routine and periodic activities crucial to assessing and validating the Minuteman III's capabilities. These tests, conducted with stringent safety protocols, allow AFGSC to collect valuable data.

"This test validated the reliability, adaptability, and modularity of the weapon system," said Col. Dustin Harmon, 377th Test and Evaluation Group commander. "Through this comprehensive assessment, conducted by a dedicated team of AFGSC Airmen, we ensure the highest standards of integrity and reliability for the nation's ICBM system."

The 377th Test and Evaluation Group, the Air Force's only dedicated ICBM test organization, oversaw the meticulous planning and execution of the test launch.

The unarmed ICBM's reentry vehicle traveled approximately 4,200 miles to the U.S. Army Space and Missile Defense Command's Ronald Reagan Ballistic Missile Defense Test Site at the Kwajalein Atoll in the Republic of the Marshall Islands.

The Reagan Test Site is equipped with advanced sensors, including high-fidelity metric and signature radars, optical sensors, and telemetry, and collected critical data during the terminal phase of flight. RTS team members analyze this data to evaluate system performance and support the research, development, test and evaluation of America's defense and space programs.

Airmen with all three AFGSC missile wings made up the task force supporting the test launch, while maintainers from the 90th Missile Wing at F.E. Warren AFB, Wyoming, provided essential maintenance support. This collective effort underscored the commitment and expertise of the Airmen who maintain and operate this vital weapon system.

As the U.S. Air Force modernizes its ICBM force with the LGM-35A Sentinel weapon system, maintaining the readiness of the existing Minuteman III remains a top priority.

"As we modernize to the Sentinel weapon system, we must continue to maintain the readiness of the existing Minuteman III fleet. GT 254 helps fulfill that commitment, ensuring its continued accuracy and reliability," said Gen. S.L. Davis, commander of Air Force Global Strike Command.

ROBINS AIR FORCE BASE, Ga. --

Brig. Gen. David Miller, formerly Director of Logistics and Engineering, Headquarters Air Force Global Strike Command at Barksdale Air Force Base, Louisiana, assumed command of the Warner Robins Air Logistics Complex from Brig. Gen. Jon Eberlan during a change of command ceremony at Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, Nov. 4, 2025.

C3BM leaders host Japanese delegation, discuss DAF BATTLE NETWORK integration

HANSCOM AIR FORCE BASE, Mass. --

The seamless integration of technologies between the U.S. and its allies is paramount to prevail in or deter the next major conflict.

To further that interoperability, delegates from the Japan Air Self-Defense Force met with leaders in the Department of the Air Force's Program Executive Office for Command, Control, Communications and Battle Management to learn about DAF BATTLE NETWORK capabilities, here, Sept. 29, 2025. The delegates received in-depth briefs from C3BM's Aerial Networks Division and Kessel Run Division leaders explained key DBN programs to help the Japanese partners understand where further integration is possible.

"It is our duty to meet with people and have discussions on site so we can understand what the objectives are, what the milestones are, and report back to our leadership to further mature our programs," said Maj. Nichinari Yamashita, a JASDF action officer, through a translator.

Aerial Networks Division deputy Vince Ross briefed with a focus on future interoperability and Joint Force decision advantage. The division is responsible for delivering, sustaining, and supporting combat-effective, multi-domain communication capabilities integrated into various Air Force weapon systems.

"Visits like these are crucial to understanding our partners' requirements and how they intend to interoperate with us," Ross said.

"Because the nature of what we do is so complicated, we have face-to-face meetings to talk through and get to the real nuanced details of their questions." Similarly, Kessel Run senior materiel leader Col. Richard Lopez briefed the delegates on KR capabilities they deliver and how they handle software acquisition and development. KR delivers resilient command and control and targeting software capabilities that provide warfighters with decision advantage. It architects and acquires the means to connect weapon systems with warfighters and decision makers to enable the Joint Force to win.

"The visit to Kessel Run was very beneficial because right now we do not have any sort of facility like this," said Lt. Col. Toshifumi Sunaga, a JASDF air staff officer, through a translator. "It was fruitful to hear how their organization has changed over the last several years, and what kind of capabilities they deliver."

The U.S.-Japan Alliance is the cornerstone of peace and security in the Indo-Pacific region. The visit served to enhance modernization efforts in interoperability and strengthen combined capabilities.

"Whenever we do things in the Indo-Pacific region, we have to do them in concert with our partners there, and that's why it's so important that we meet with them," Ross said. "Any threat in the region isn't going to just require a response from us, but from all of our partners in the region."

The JASDF is responsible for air and space operations within the Japanese Self-Defense Force. The visit was organized by C3BM's Aerial Networks International Branch Tokyo Office, which supports networking interoperability between Japan and the U.S. through the Foreign Military Sales program.

C3BM is responsible for designing and delivering the DAF BATTLE NETWORK. The DAF BATTLE NETWORK is the integrated system of systems connecting sensor, effector, and logistics systems providing better situational awareness, faster decisions, and decisive direction. In short, resilient decision advantage to the Joint Force.

TINKER AIR FORCE BASE, Okla. --

Lt. Gen. Jennifer Hammerstedt assumed command of the Air Force Sustainment Center from Lt. Gen. Stacey Hawkins during a change of command ceremony, Nov. 13, 2025 at Tinker Air Force Base.

Air Force Materiel Command Interim Commander Lt. Gen. Linda Hurry presided over the ceremony. Hurry oversaw the passing of the center's guidon, traditionally symbolizing the transfer of positional authority from Hawkins to Hammerstedt. Due to the government shutdown, all travel fees associated with the ceremony were paid for as personal, out-of-pocket expenses.

"She's very mission-focused, and she's going to drive us in the right direction, but she's going to take care of all the Airmen along the way," Hurry said regarding Hammerstedt. "I am thrilled for your organization because I know just how special of a leader you're getting. You had a phenomenal one in General Hawkins. You're getting another tremendous leader in General Hammerstedt."

Hammerstedt served as the senior logistian within the lead major command for Combat Air Forces during her previous assignment and was responsible for strategy, policy, resources and performance management of aircraft maintenance, munitions, supply, transportation, logistics plans, installation support and force protection activities.

"This is an amazing opportunity and I know the Air Force Sustainment Center is a national treasure, so it means a lot that you would entrust it to me and I'm very humbled by that," Hammerstedt said as she spoke for the first time as the new AFSC commander. "If you look at the history of the center and the units within the center, this center represents 85 years of blood, sweat, and tears supporting the warfighter and delivering airpower for our nation. This center is rooted in the World War II era, a buildup of our military, and it has contributed to every named operation over eight decades."

Hammerstedt received her commission from the U.S. Air Force Academy in 1996 and has held various staff and command positions, including within AFSC, where she previously served as the 75th Air Base Wing commander at Hill AFB Utah, and as the commander of the Warner Robins Air Logistics Complex at Robins AFB, Georgia. She was most recently the director of logistics, engineering and force protection for Air Combat Command at Joint Base Langley-Eustis, Virginia.

Hawkins, who earned his commission from the U.S. Air Force Academy in 1991, is retiring after more than 34 years of active Air Force service.

The mission of the Air Force Sustainment Center is "forging readiness and accelerating innovation for America's warfighters." The center provides war-winning expeditionary capabilities to the warfighter through world-class depot maintenance, supply chain management and operations, software development and maintenance and installation support.

HANSCOM AIR FORCE BASE, Mass. — A member of the 66th Medical Squadron has been recognized by base officials for her volunteer efforts after leading and coordinating local community and on-base professional events.

Senior Airman Ma'Kaila

Eckermann, an MDS oral preventive assistant, was recently named as the 66th Air Base Group's volunteer of the quarter for her work supporting a humanitarian effort in Connecticut, organizing a Community College of the Air Force graduation ceremony, and serving as a ceremonial guardsman.

"Senior Airman Eckermann's dedication to volunteerism demonstrates the whole Airman concept in action," said Chief Master Sgt. Jason Vollmer, installation command chief. "Her efforts show the importance of giving back to the communities we live and serve, and she is a great example of the impact we can have when doing so."

Earlier this year, Eckermann led the coordination of four MDS Airmen participating in a Connecticut-based humanitarian mission. The Hanscom AFB off-duty team volunteered to assist with providing free dental care to underserved communities across New England.

"They performed everything from extractions to cleanings and made an impact in the local community across the region," she said.

In addition, Eckermann volunteered this past spring to help lead the installation's first CCAF graduation ceremony since 2022. The event recognized enlisted Airmen who completed associate degrees.

She also volunteered as a ceremonial guardsman for the Patriot Honor Guard.

As the only active duty installation in the seven-state northeast region, honor guard members support military funerals and other events throughout New England and New York.

Eckermann, who entered the Air Force in 2019, has served in a variety of roles within the squadron's dental flight, including her current position as sterilization technician and as a unit safety representative.

She was promoted to staff sergeant earlier this year.

Originally from San Antonio, Texas, and raised in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, Eckermann has been stationed at Hanscom AFB for more than six years. She is scheduled to transfer to Colorado Springs, Colorado, in January.

"Every opportunity to volunteer, whether in the clinic, the honor guard, or in the community, has been meaningful," she said.
